

Jennifer Huntley is a Consultant supporting the Public Interest Executive Search team at Conroy Ross Partners. She believes that finding innovative and inspired solutions to problems depends on knowing what questions to ask, and how to ask them imaginatively. A life-long learner, Jennifer also has an extensive academic background, as well as recent experience working directly with elected officials in a research and communications capacity. For Jennifer, one of the most engaging elements of her career in Edmonton's municipal and not-for-profit spaces is the opportunity to connect directly with community members and organizations. She considers libraries to be our most human and democratic of public institutions.

Jennifer has a strong interest in language and writing, and holds a Master of Arts in English literature from the University of Victoria. Her thesis focused on contemporary Indigenous fiction, and this remains a powerful influence on her outlook and practice, both culturally and functionally. She brings her writing skills to bear on her daily work, understanding the importance of nuanced expression in every day communication.
