IMPROVING ACCESS TO YOUR LIBRARY

SAINT PAUL
PUBLIC LIBRARY

SEPTEMBER 2018

The background image shows the interior of the Berkeley Public Library. It features a high ceiling with exposed wooden beams and decorative painted patterns. Large, multi-paned windows on the right side allow natural light into the space. Several people are seated at long wooden tables, engaged in reading or study. Bookshelves filled with books are visible in the background. The overall atmosphere is quiet and scholarly.

public libraries are the people's university and we need to make sure they are accessible to everyone.

history of efforts to increase access:

- + Fine-free children's materials
- + No fines on Library Go cards
- + Read-down option

Even after those efforts, nearly 1 in 5 cardholders are currently blocked.

That's 19% or 51,000 people.

34%

Cards registered at Rondo are blocked.

Percentages of blocked cards are higher in economically-challenged neighborhoods.

Children's materials are returned at similar rates to other materials, even though they don't have fines.

Fines are not a sustainable form of revenue for the Library budget.

lessons learned from other libraries

Library systems have a range of options, from incremental to transformational, when seeking to increase access and remove barriers.

Libraries across the country are going fine-free.

“We’ve shut off access to the library when one of our staunchest principles is trying to provide the widest access that we can.”

- PATRICK LOSINSKI, COLUMBUS PUBLIC LIBRARY CEO

late fines are not effective.

“The scant research on the value and impact of library fines and fees does not indicate a clear benefit of administering these policies, and they may be costly to enforce.”

- REMOVING BARRIERS TO ACCESS (COLORADO STATE LIBRARY WHITE PAPER)

collecting fines is expensive.

If we estimate that Saint Paul Public Library frontline staff spend 10% of their time on fine-related transactions, it would amount to over 12,000 hours and $250,000 in staff time.

in fine-free libraries, people still return items.

Accounts are blocked from checking out once items have been billed. Library users are still expected to pay for lost items and damaged items.

SAINT PAUL

It's a difficult conversation for us. You can tell the person has a gut-sinking feeling when faced with fines. We are service-oriented. Fines prevent people from wanting to use the Library and create an unfriendly environment.

Many families no longer have access to the library because they all have fines. It can really stack up, especially when you have kids who started accruing fines when they were very young. Some have had fines on their cards since they were five years old. - AJ, LIBRARY ASSOCIATE

Having worked at all library branches, I've noticed a stark difference in the number of people unable to check out materials due to fines at different locations. Fines are an equity issue preventing access to the library.

- PANG, COMMUNITY SERVICES COORDINATOR

Transportation and mobility can sometimes become an issue. For our family, fines can add up very quickly because of these mobility issues.

- RICE STREET LIBRARY PATRON

“My child (who has disabilities) racked up fines on my library card years ago. After paying them a few times, I gave up this last time and stopped checking things out. I miss the library.”

“[Stop] charging late fees - institute a system that is more effective and does not drive the people who need libraries most away through shame or inability to pay.”

“I really love the library and it makes me sad that I haven’t been able to make use of it because of this policy on fines.”

“You are an important part of our community. Keep up the good work. The city should fund the libraries to keep fees low so all families have access.”

our public service promise:

The Saint Paul Public Library belongs to the people of Saint Paul.
