east side stories

Some notable 19th-century neighbors whose names live on near the Burroughs Creek Trail

Well-watered by springs and a creek, this once wild land north and east of the original Lawrence town site has long been a magnet for human habitation beginning with the indigenous peoples of earlier centuries. Following the opening of Kansas Territory to Euro-American settlers in 1854, new arrivals built farms, and built homes. Some engaged in civic life, others played a part in incorporating the area now traversed by the Burroughs Creek Trail and Lawrence Park into Lawrence city limits.

Many of these 19th-century neighborhood residents were notable in their day. Now, their stories are largely forgotten. In many cases, only their names remain. But in living rooms long closed...

Just to the east of the Burroughs Creek Trail's 15th Street access point is the Lawrence Avenue access point. Lawrence Avenue was named for Andrew Jackson, the fifth President of the United States, who was a member of the U.S. Senate from 1812-1817. President Andrew Jackson is immortalized here as a prominent resident of Lawrence.

The Burroughs Creek Trail Project is being developed by Sunflower Republic, LLC, under the auspices of the Lawrence Arts Commission and the Kansas Heritage Area, with in-kind assistance from the Hall Center for the Humanities at the University of Kansas.

arrows overburdened by springs and a creek, this once wild land north and east of the original Lawrence town site has long been a magnet for human habitation beginning with the indigenous peoples of earlier centuries. Following the opening of Kansas Territory to Euro-American settlers in 1854, new arrivals built farms, and built homes. Some engaged in civic life, others played a part in incorporating the area now traversed by the Burroughs Creek Trail and Lawrence Park into Lawrence city limits.

Many of these 19th-century neighborhood residents were notable in their day. Now, their stories are largely forgotten. In many cases, only their names remain. But in living rooms long closed...

Just to the east of the Burroughs Creek Trail's 15th Street access point is the Lawrence Avenue access point. Lawrence Avenue was named for Andrew Jackson, the fifth President of the United States, who was a member of the U.S. Senate from 1812-1817. President Andrew Jackson is immortalized here as a prominent resident of Lawrence.

The Burroughs Creek Trail Project is being developed by Sunflower Republic, LLC, under the auspices of the Lawrence Arts Commission and the Kansas Heritage Area, with in-kind assistance from the Hall Center for the Humanities at the University of Kansas.

Lawrence, Kansas

Lawrence is the home of the University of Kansas, a public research university located in the city of Lawrence, Kansas. It was founded in 1865 as a land-grant institution under the Morrill Act.

The University of Kansas is a public research university located in Lawrence, Kansas. It was founded in 1865 as a land-grant institution under the Morrill Act.

Lawrence's history dates back to prehistoric times, with evidence of human habitation in the area dating back to the Ice Age. The region was inhabited by various Native American tribes, including the Kansas, Osage, and Shawnee.

The city was founded in 1854 as a center for the anti-slavery movement, and the University of Kansas was established in 1865 as a land-grant institution under the Morrill Act.

Lawrence was the site of several important events in Kansas history, including the Quantrill Raid in 1863 and the Lecompton Constitution Convention of 1857.

In addition to its historical significance, Lawrence is known for its vibrant arts and cultural scene, as well as its strong university community.

Lawrence Today

Lawrence is a city located in eastern Kansas, United States. It is the home of the University of Kansas, a public research university with a strong arts and cultural scene.

The city is also known for its diverse population, with a mix of students, young professionals, and families.

Lawrence is home to a variety of cultural organizations, including the Lawrence Arts Commission, the Lawrence Community Center, and the Lawrence Public Library.

Lawrence is also home to several notable landmarks, including the Lawrence Arts Center, the Lawrence County Courthouse, and the Lawrence Arts Commission.