About The Doughnut Fix

Tristan isn't gifted or talented like his sister Jeanine, and he's always been okay with that because he can make a perfect chocolate chip cookie and he lives in the greatest city in the world. But his life takes a turn for the worse when his parents decide to move to middle-of-nowhere Petersville — a town with one street and no restaurants. It's like suddenly they're supposed to be this other family, one that can survive without bagels and movie theaters.

His suspicions about his new town are confirmed when he's tricked into believing the local general store has life-changing, chocolate cream doughnuts, when in fact the owner hasn't made them in years. And so begins the only thing that could make life in Petersville worth living: getting the recipe, making the doughnuts, and bringing them back to the town through his very own doughnut stand. But Tristan will soon discover that when starting a business, it helps to be both gifted and talented, and it's possible he's bitten off more than he can chew.

About Jessie Janowitz

In high school, Jessie fell in love with the French language (and French pastry!), and when she went to Princeton for college, she majored in comparative literature because it allowed her to study French, plus everything else she was interested in, including creative writing.

After college, Jessie taught in a French public high school for cooking and restaurant service. Then she sold translation rights for a publishing house. This led her to law school, which she loved. One of the many cool things about the U.S. legal system: it's built on stories!

Eventually, thanks to her family, she found herself back reading and writing stories for kids because those are the stories she's always loved best.
