Virtual Programming

Bring The Loft to You
Saturdays, 10:30 a.m. - 12 p.m.

September 5: Great Communication Skills: Grammar, Tone, Syntax
In this webinar, you will develop skills in grammar and business communication relevant to digital communication and report writing in the workplace. The program begins with a review of basic grammar and usage. Topics discussed include punctuation, verb tenses and mechanics. How to use advanced techniques such as tone, narrative strategy and descriptive language will be reviewed. The instructor will provide structured lessons and feedback on the art and science of grammar and the craft of effective writing.

September 12: Social Media Voice: Finding Authenticity
Gracious or flip? Funny or refined? Curious or cool? We can likely all think of social media examples where these choices have gone awry or been wildly effective, so even if we know the why (the strategy) and the what (the content) for our business’ social channels, how do we know the how (our tone)? The most effective social media channels find a following through personality, and that only comes across through voice. In this seminar—through case studies, exercises, and examples—we’ll explore what kinds of voices an organization might take on, and how to go about determining the best fit for yours.

September 19: Social Media Strategy: Content and Conversation
Do you know why your organization uses (or should use) social media? If you don’t know or you thought something like ‘to make it go viral’ or ‘that’s just what everyone does,’ you probably don’t have much in the way of a social media strategy. In this seminar, we’ll explore what tools to consider, when and how often to post, which content to share, who can help create and extend conversations, and how to analyze your results, diffuse your critics, and amplify your strongest advocates.

October 3: Writing for the Web
When you go to a company or an organization’s website, you aren’t seeking the same things you might from a great book, but that doesn’t mean there isn’t an art to writing for the web. Website writing needs to be organized and presented for the medium it serves. The scanning eye and clicking finger dominate this landscape, and effective organizational website writing knows how to take advantage of those behaviors. In this seminar, you’ll learn some key web writing practices like employing hierarchies of information, ensuring short, scannable text, and highlighting content with visual cues.

October 10: Improving Emails and E-news
Email remains one of the cornerstones of marketing plans and workplace communication. Yet, our inboxes are flooded, our emails go unanswered, and we delete more than we read. Is this just the way it is, or is there anything we can do to make email—both internal and external—more effective? Of course. From the subject line to the signature file, we'll examine e-newsletters, email correspondence, and maybe even a spam message or two to look at what inspires action and what just falls flat.

October 17: Content Strategy
Many traditional outreach methods are becoming less and less effective—people are skimming, fast forwarding, blocking and deleting like never before. But they skip in order to get to something else. Having a consistent, audience-centered content strategy, one that doesn’t interrupt what people want, but instead gives them what they want, is one of the best ways to break through the noise. In this seminar, we’ll discuss the why, how and what of creating content that people actually seek.

This series is presented by The Loft and funded by MELSA.
